The National Food Security Act passed in 2013 was a result of the discussions and deliberations by academia, policy-makers and members of the civil society and government. Divided into four sections, the first part of the book deals with the concepts, definition and scope of food security in the national and international context, the second deals with universalism, transfers and conditionalities, the third deals with food entitlements and special groups while the fourth deals with enforcements and transparency systems. This book throws light on the debates around the access of food and is of particular interest for researchers and organisations interested in food security.
